Upjohn Institute for Employment Research, 2004 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)126874906 Subject: Displaced workers -- Services for -- United States. Excerpt: . . . Resolution, in March 2003 PRAs were removed from WIA reauthorization legislation know as 2 the Workforce Reinvestment and Adult Education Act of 2003. Nonetheless, the administration 3 continues to advocate the creation of PRAs. So states must be prepared to act quickly. Effective implementation of PRAs requires advance planning, monitoring of the use of funds by early PRA enrollees, and adjustment of state PRA plans during the course of enrollment. Critical participant response parameters include rates of PRA offer acceptance, intensive and training service use rates, the rate of qualification for first bonus payments, and the rate of qualification for second bonus payment. Cost data for intensive and training services are also required for planning and implementation of PRAs. This paper examines issues relating to PRA implementation based on simulations performed using administrative data provided by the state of Georgia. The W. E. Upjohn Institute for Employment Research investigated these questions under a grant from the U. S. Department of Labor. The data from Georgia constitute a rare sample linking UI claims and employment services records. To be forward looking, our simulations used the new WPRS model now being implemented in Georgia. The next section provides an overview of how PRAs would work as proposed by HR 444 in January, 2003. Section 3 lays the foundation for simulation analysis of PRAs by examining the pattern of service use in our sample for analysis. Section 4 estimates prices for intensive, supportive, and training services as a basis for simulation. Section 5 gives a...
